China struggling to get the world to trust its Covid-19 vaccines

BLOOMBERG Hong Kong/ Karachi, December 29

OF ALL THE developing countries testing China's Covid-19 vaccines, few are friendlier to Beijing than Pakistan. In the years leading up to the pandemic, China financed nearly $70 billion across the South Asian nation on roads, railways and power stations, and Pakistan now has two Chinese clinical trials under way, with even senior government officials being inoculated. Yet interviews with people in Karachi, the nation's biggest city — as well as in other developing nations from Indonesia to Brazil, together with surveys and official comments — show that China has failed to assure the millions of people who may have to rely on its vaccines.

“I won't take it,” said Farman Ali Shah, a motorcycle driver in Karachi for local ride-hailing app Bykea, as local shops closed early ahead of an 8 pm virus-induced curfew. “I don't trust it.” That mistrust, and the reliance of dozens of poorer nations on China to inoculate their populations, could set the stage for a major global political headache if citizens offered the Chinese vaccine feel they are being given an inferior product. China's vaccines were meant to score a clear diplomatic win for Beijing, shoring up ties with dozens of poorer nations amid an anticipated shortage of Western-developed shots. But there has been little information about how the Chinese versions have fared in final-stage clinical trials, just with the United Arab Emirates and China itself endorsing the vaccines for emergency use so far. Meanwhile, some US and European companies have published data on the safety and efficacy of their shots and started to deploy them. That uncertainty presents another roadblock in China's efforts to extend its political influence across Asia, Africa and South America. Through its seven-year-old Belt and Road Initiative, Beijing spent billions on loans and projects and cultivated local elites to buttress its political and economic power — efforts that have often
