Bhutan charges Rs.1200 per Indian tourist

Bhutan, Sept 24: Bhutan has finally opened its doors for international tourists after shutting its doors to international tourists for two and a half years during the Covid pandemic.

The reopening has come with a revised tourism levy, called the Sustainable Development Fee.

Bhutan raised its Sustainable Development Fee to $200 per visitor per night from the $65 it had been charging foreign tourists for the last three decades.

Indians were not charged anything before the pandemic began, but rules specify that they now have to pay a sum of Rs1200. However, the revised fee for Indian tourists was never implemented.

In March 2020, Bhutan shut its borders to visitors - a major source of income - after detecting its first case of COVID-19.

The Himalayan Kingdom of fewer than 800,000 people has reported a little over 61,000 infections and only 21 deaths, but its economy has suffered in the last two years, causing a spike in poverty.

"The Government of Bhutan has re-strategized its 'High Value, Low Volume' tourism policy to ensure the sustainable use of tourism resources and to create an enabling environment for a vibrant, non-discriminatory, inclusive, and high-value tourism industry in Bhutan," said Jigme Thinley Namgyal, Bhutan's Consul General to NDTV.

Bhutan, wedged between India and China and famous for measuring gross national happiness, hopes to welcome more tourists who can spend money.

Thailand removes all entry requirements

Thailand, Sept 24: Thailand has become the latest destination around the world to remove all of its Covid-19-related entry requirements and return to normal tourism.

The Land of Smiles - one of the most popular destinations in the world for travelers prior to the pandemic - has struggled throughout most of the past three years from a tourism point of view due to strict and unrealistic entry requirements, but will be hoping to welcome a significant number of tourists back once these changes to their entry requirements go into effect.

With visiting Thailand now set to be more attractive than ever thanks to longer visas on arrival being offered at present and beaches far less crowded than they once were, the country has well and truly been put back on the map for millions of travelers around the world. Here's a look at what changes are set to take place, when they'll be active and why travelers keep coming back to this Southeast Asian gem.

Prior to the pandemic, Thailand was one of the most popular places to visit on the planet. Bangkok, the country's sprawling capital, was crowned the world's most visited city, attracting all kinds of travelers from a diverse range of countries. Yet whilst Covid-19 may have put a serious dent in the number of travelers flocking to the country, the decision to remove all of the country's Covid-19 related entry requirements could see travelers returning in their millions over the next few years.

Following a meeting with the National Communicable Diseases Committee (NCDC) on Wednesday, Thailand's Public Health Minister Anutin Charnvirakul revealed yesterday that the country would be removing the Covid-19 related restrictions on international arrivals that had been put into place over the past few years, making entry into the country just as easy as it was before the pandemic threw the travel-sphere of a lifetime.
