U.N. HIGH SEAS TALKS FAIL TO REACH AN AGREEMENT

After 15 years, including four prior formal sessions, negotiators have yet to reach a legally binding text to address the issues facing international waters

CLIMATE

UNITED NATIONS: UN member states ended two weeks of negotiations Friday without a treaty to protect biodiversity in the high seas, an agreement that would have addressed growing environmental and economic challenges.

lent progress, we still do need a little bit more time to progress towards the finish line," said conference chair Rena Lee.

It will now be up to the UN General Assembly to resume the fifth session at a date still to be determined.

Many had hoped the session, which began on August 15 at the United Nations headquarters in New York, would be the last and yield a final text on "the conservation and sustainable use of marine biodiversity beyond national jurisdiction," or BBNJ for short.

"While it's disappointing that the treaty wasn't finalised during the past two weeks of negotiations, we remain encouraged by the progress that was made," said Liz Karan of the NGO Pew Charitable Trusts, calling for a new session by the end of the year.

One of the most sensitive issues in the text revolved around the sharing of possible profits from the development of genetic resources in international waters, where pharmaceutical, chemical and cosmetic companies hope to find miracle drugs, products or cures.

Such costly research at sea is largely the prerogative of rich nations, but developing countries do not want to be left out of potential windfall profits drawn from marine resources that belong to no one.

Similar issues of equity arise in other international negotiations, such as on climate change, in which developing nations that feel outsized harm from global warming have tried in vain to get wealthier countries to help pay to offset those impacts. The high seas begin at the border of a nation's exclusive economic zone (EEZ)—which by international law reaches no more than 200 nautical miles (370 kilometres) from its coast—and are under no state's jurisdiction.

Sixty per cent of the world's oceans fall under this category. And while healthy marine ecosystems are crucial to the future of humanity, particularly to limit global warming, only one per cent of international waters are protected. One of the key pillars of an eventual BBNJ treaty is to allow the creation of marine protected areas, which many nations hope will cover 30% of the Earth's ocean by 2030.

"Without establishing protections in this vast area, we will not be able to meet our ambitious and necessary 30 by 30 goal," US State Department official Maxine Burkett said at an earlier press conference.

But delegations still disagree on the process for creating these protected areas as well as how required environmental impact assessments will be implemented before new high seas activity begins.

"What a missed opportunity..." tweeted Klaudivija Cremeris, a researcher at the IDDR think tank, which, like multiple other NGOs, has a seat with observer status at the negotiations.

The delegate from Samoa, addressing the conference on behalf of the smaller developing island nations of the Pacific, said they were "disappointed." "We live very far and it is not cheap to travel all this way. This money was not spent on roads, on medicine, schools," she added.

France to take steps to contain soaring electricity prices soon

ENERGY

PARIS: France's finance minister pledged Saturday to keep electricity costs in check for consumers as European energy prices soar.

The Paris government has put in place an energy price cap to shield households until December 31 and Bruno Le Maire said that next year, expected hikes would be "contained increases".

"The four per cent cap will be maintained to the end of the year," he told a ruling coalition conference in the eastern city of Metz. "There will be no catch-up of costs on the ceiling in 2023," he vowed after President Emmanuel Macron had on Wednesday warned of energy price hikes.

Le Maire also said access to a three billion euro fund for businesses unable to meet energy bills would be made easier. European electricity prices soared to new records this week, presaging a bitter winter as Russia's invasion of Ukraine inflicts economic pain across the continent.

But the war is not the only culprit in France, where nuclear energy currently covers some 70% of the nation's electricity needs. The shutdown of several nuclear reactors due to corrosion issues has contributed to the French electricity price increase.

Traditionally an exporter of electricity, France is now an importer. The year-ahead contract for French electricity surged past 1,100 euros per megawatt hour—a more than tenfold increase on last year. In Britain, energy regulator Ofgem said it would increase the electricity and gas price cap almost two-fold from October 1 to an average £3,549 per year.

Ofgem blamed the increase on the spike in gas prices to the lifting of Covid restrictions and Russian curbs.

Dead fish and depression on the banks of the Oder

MARINE LIFE

CIGACICE: Appearing tired and stressed, Piotr Wloch looks out dejectedly at his empty tourist boats on the Oder river after an environmental disaster that has killed thousands of fish.

Like many local businesses, Wloch has seen bookings plunge by 90% following the as yet unexplained catastrophe on the lush banks of a river between Poland and Germany. "I'm just starting to realise the scale of what happened," Wloch told AFP.

"Yesterday, I slept all day because I was depressed, unable to move," he said.

In the empty tourist marina of Cigacice in Poland, firefighters are still removing dead fish while environmental agency workers take water samples for tests.

The stench of dead fish fills the air. Between 200 and 300 kilograms of dead fish have been removed in Cigacice in the past few days—out of around 300 tonnes in total from the Oder since the start of August, officials said. "Everyone is afraid. Only some curious people pop in to have a look, but life has stopped," said Lukasz Duch, director of a local sports centre. "Before the pollution, on a good weekend, Cigacice would draw between 5,000 and 10,000 tourists. "This place was full of life... Now businesses are making nothing in high season," he said.
